David Marett Loses by Fire.

South Union, October 11.-Last Friday morning David Marett lost his barn and cotton house and their contents by fire, which was discovered between 2 and 3 o'clock by an aged colored man who happened to be sleeping in the cotton house about 40 feet from the barn. The alarm was proved by given and Mr. Marett barely had time to get out his horses and cattle, and in doing this was blistered about his hands and neck.

It will be remembered that the wind was high, and everything being so dry it was with difficulty that his dwelling was saved, it having caught repeatedly, and, being to the windward, its escape is considered almost miraculous. The woods, perhaps 200 yards beyond the house, took fire and were extinguished with took fire and were extinguished with difficulty.

Mr. Marett, a year ago, purchased the old D. H. Glenn homestead, the dwelling of which was burned several years ago, the barn, an excellent building, erected by S. S. McJunkin in 1876, escaping to mark the spot and remind friends of former days that here the happy Glenn family—father and son—were once domiciled. But Friday morning's conflagration has wiped out the last landmark, verifying the sentiment of holy writ, the places that now know us will soon know us no more forever.
